Questionnaire

Overview

The purpose of this document is to provide a structured and comprehensive list of elements VCs consider during the due diligence phase. Even though, VCs and Angels take a different approach when it comes to due diligence, this document is also beneficial for individuals who are planning to become Angel Investors.

The VC Due Diligence Questionnaire in this document should not be considered as a completely exhaustive list or absolutely mandatory step-by-step guidelines that all Founders must follow nor a set of guidelines Investors have to adopt mandatorily. The data has been compiled from various sources such as disclosures by VCs, books and/or blogs written by VCs, UK Business Angel Association and Academic research papers.

Kushim is not a legal Firm and the information provided here does not substitute a legal attorney's advice. The due diligence questions in this document can differ from VCs to VCs and also differ with respect to the stage and type of the startup that is being considered for investment. Hence, the questionnaire provided in this document should not be considered completely exhaustive.

Introduction

Due diligence is one of the core processes of the venture capital investment stage where investors investigate the suitability of an investment for funding. VCs also request the Founders a plethora of legal documents.

The primary objective of the due diligence process is to mitigate investment risks by gaining an in-depth understanding of the business of the company under consideration for funding. The importance of the due diligence process can be illustrated by the Hitsgalore incident.

In February 1998, California based online advertisement company, Hitsgalore.com went public. Its market value had shot up from $53 million to nearly $1 billion. At that time, its shares were trading around $20 per share. Before the IPO, the management of the company had assured SEC that there were no lawsuits nor any previous enquiries against any of the employees of the company.

However, in May 1999, a disclosure was made regarding the founder that he was accused by the government for cheating customers in his previous job. When this news came out, the share price plummeted to $9.44 per share and once it even went down to $8.56 per share. The company had lost more than $525 million of its market value.

The Hitsgalore incident is one of the many incidents that shows the importance of due diligence process. Below we have given an overview of the VC investment process focusing on the internal flow of information leading to the two phases of due diligence. After that we have provided a brief list of due diligence questionnaire which the VCs send to Founders or management of a startup that is under consideration for investment.

The VC Due Diligence Process

VCs generate deals directly through investment proposals submitted to them directly by the founders of the company or indirectly such as through referrals from founders they have worked with, consultants, investment bankers and brokers. All the proposals go through an initial screening where VCs eliminate potential investments based on incompatibility with their investment thesis, geography and stage of development. In addition to the above mentioned factors, VCs also consider government factor i.e. unwanted influence of government in investment process (An important factor VCs in emerging and Eastern European economies consider). The figure below shows comprehensive pointers VCs use during the screening phase.

The proposals that pass the initial screening are assigned to members of the VC firm which consists of a “deal promoter” or “deal leader” (usually a senior VC) and one or two other members. The deal team now investigates the viability of the investment to identify deal breakers. Analysis focusing on key areas such as product, management team, IRR, business model, market, competition and finance is carried out using the available information and the knowledge base of VC. This is a straightforward exercise for the VCs. The deal team also meets with the Founders or the management for a preliminary discussion. Internally, the VCs prepare the “minutes” of deal meeting where they record the outcomes of each meeting. Post this meeting, the VCs prepare an internal document/preliminary deal memorandum. This document consists of an evaluation done by the VCs on the following fronts:

1. Quality and potential of the Management Team
2. Projected growth and size of company's target market segment/s.
3. Company's ability to sustain its competitive advantage
4. Potential risks and company's risk management policies
5. Company's financial projections
6. Potential to liquidate the investment within 3-5 years

Now the firm sends this internal document to the investment committee and/or the supervisory board. The investment committee is an internal decision making unit of the VC firm while the supervisory board consists of representatives of limited partners. For some VC firms the supervisory board might have decision making powers, while for others it doesn't.

The primary focus of investment committee and board is to provide their views regarding the concept of business, the industry and share their concerns. The concerns are updated by the VCs in their internal document. The moment VCs and the committee are satisfied, VCs commence the first phase of due diligence. The figure below maps out the decision process leading to due diligence phase I:

Concept adopted from: The VC process in Emerging Markets (2007) by Darek Klonowski

VCs draft a due diligence questionnaire and send it to the entrepreneurs or the management of the company. The entrepreneurs are expected to provide written answers and documents to VCs during the subsequent meetings. VCs then start discussing about the deal terms. So far the VC firm has not incurred any additional costs.

Internally, VCs continue the process of redrafting the commercial and deal-related issues. This list becomes the basis for the second phase of due diligence. VCs summarize the findings of first phase of due diligence in a memorandum called deal memorandum/deal qualification memorandum or investment memorandum. This differs from firm to firm but ultimately it consists of similar types of concerns.

Before commencing the second phase of due diligence, the VCs negotiate the deal terms and prepare a term sheet which is then signed. The signed document is then presented to the investment committee and/or supervisory board. At the same time, VCs prepare a budget for the second phase of due diligence which is external due diligence. The figure below provides a snapshot of internal processes and second phase of due diligence:

Concept adopted from: The VC process in Emerging Markets (2007) by Darek Klonowski

The second phase of due diligence focuses on three key areas- legal, accounting and environmental. The legal due diligence focuses on audit of the investment's assets, agreements with suppliers, consumers and other financial institutions. The accounting due diligence focuses on the accounting norms (US GAAP or IFRS), historical financial data of the last 12 or 18 months, analysis of off balance sheet liabilities such as internal loans or tax considerations and finally an analysis of the internal accounting process of the investment. Environment related factors have a more profound importance for manufacturing companies and the due diligence related to environment factors is mostly about the waste management policies.
